

Spectrum Glass has proven to be the #1 choice of art glass for stained glass crafters worldwide. The smooth surface and careful annealing provide soft & predictable cutting. The well mixed, easily reproduced colors and textures make this glass appealing to designers. Spectrum exclusives include Baroque with a swirling pattern similar to reamy antiques; Waterglass with soft, longitudinal ripples; and Rough Rolled, featuring Spectrum's bright cathedral colors in a soft distortive pattern. Spectrum has put years of experimentation and constant refining into their process in order to offer such an excellent product. Spectrum Glass is truly ASGS Instructor Endorsed!

Desag "Antik"(German New Antique)

Desag Semi-Antique (German New Antique), or drawn antique, is still made the "old way" using the Fourcault process. This process involves dipping a metal rod into the molten glass then "drawing" it upward. As the glass is pulled vertically, it's cooled and annealed to form a sheet. Since no rollers are used, the glass maintains its brilliance, making it the closest thing to authentic mouth-blown antique glass.

Atlantic Stained Glass Bright Idea

"Black rot", the black spotting that appears around the mirror's edge, is caused by the tarnish of the metals used to make the reflective surface. As soon as you cut the mirror there is an exposed edge which can come into contact with various corrosive agents. Ammonia in glass cleaner, the acid in flux & patina, even the adhesive backing on the copper foil may corrode the mirrored back. If you make a stained glass project with mirror, you must protect the edge with a sealant. Professional mirror edge sealant and silver protectors are readily available (Section G - Supplies). However, a good quality varnish, unbleached shellac or even clear nail polish will do in a pinch. (Please be advised that these materials were NOT developed to act as mirror edge sealants, they should only be used in small projects or emergency situations.) Be sure to coat all exposed edges before foiling or leading and always use a non-acid flux while soldering near that sensitive mirrored surface.

Kokomo Opalescent Glass was founded in 1888, making it one of the oldest manufacturers of colored art glass today. Many of the “recipes” are still used today, as are the original rollers; the only change being that they are now cranked by machine instead of being hand cranked.

Founded in the Paden City, West Virginia, Wissmach Glass originally manufactured glass letters for elevators and glass tubing. Over the years Wissmach has consistently developed new colors and textures to meet its customer’s demands. Though new glass is always being introduced, many colors & textures produced at the turn of the century are still produced today.

Clear Glu-Chip, Float Glass & Mirrored Glass

Clear Glu-Chip is perhaps the most versatile and widely used art glass today. Loved by artisans & hobbyists alike, glu-chip is easily cut and imparts a delightful “frosted” look to the glass. This texture is achieved by pouring a layer of glue on sandblasted glass which, when it dries, pulls away “chipping” the glass. This glass is perfect when both optimal natural light & privacy are required.

Always keep a project log in which you record the catalog number of the glass used to complete a project. If you ever want to duplicate that project or have to match glass for a repair, having a record of what glass you used removes the guess work. Each manufacturer makes a glass that is technically different from the others, however to the untrained eye, many shades and textures are easily confused for one another! If you truly want to avoid the confusion ... keep a project log!
